The Rev. Botkin was a modern religious man in his belief in the Divine Feminine and in a freer relationship between the sexes in the name and spirit of his faith. Although his West Hempstead church had only fewer services, and this was before the prison revolution and our present environmental crisis, he was a nature lover, and was, as a Pagan mystic. We see in him the very wide ecstasies of backgrounds, temperaments, attitudes and beliefs in modern Pagan religion. His father, Dr. Eugene Botkin was court physician to the last czar of Russia. His early life therefore was close word that is the extreme opposite to strife - that for him the different kinds of love were not of the essence of this virtue. Virtue that transcends the antimony of passion and peace in a higher beatitude of being. Rev. Dotkin was not cooperative with other Pagan sects. He believed that he had the Godless truth in his teaching in all its purity. To his way of thinking this truth is very simple. So simple and self-evident that many people fail to see it because of its simplicity. He has indeed made a contribution to the faith of the future. - W.H.K. (Thanks to GREEN 555)
