What will be shared?

“Good Housing Can Save the World.” Sounds bold? Come find out why.

In 25 minutes, Jo Carson will break down how designing our neighborhoods like ecosystems (Permaculture + Urbanism = Edenicity) can slash traffic, end isolation, improve our health, reverse the mass extinction crisis, and even fight fires and floods.

This isn't utopian—it's practical. And it starts with housing.

About Jo Carson

As a dedicated documentarian and author, Jo Carson spent her career bringing fascinating, earth-centered narratives to light—beginning at age 21, when a three-month expedition to Nepal resulted in her award-winning 16mm film about life in the world's highest mountains. Her subsequent films, Natural Motion Pictures and A Dance for the Goddess, explored the rhythms of human life and seasonal nature rites, culminating in her feature film, Dancing with Gaia, which synthesized the insights of 15 spiritual leaders on the Goddess movement and earth-based spirituality. A recognized authority in the field, she authored the book Celebrate Wildness: Magic, Mirth and Love on the Feraferia Path—chronicling the art and visions of Frederick Adams—and has shared her expertise as a featured and keynote speaker at many venues including PantheaCon, the Claremont Symposium, and Cherry Hill Seminary.

Building on her presentation Ride the Wind to a Clean Air Future for the Marin Interfaith Climate Action group, this current project shares how the visionary principles of Edenicity and Solarpunk can actively solve our planet's most pressing ecological challenges and foster true economic abundance by combining

Permaculture with intentional urban redesign.

The Earth-based Spirituality Action Team is for anyone who keeps the sacred Earth at the center of their practice. We see action on climate change as an urgent moral imperative. We aim to reach out into our global communities and recruit volunteers for Citizens' Climate Lobby. We recognize and honor the spiritual nature of climate work.
